Dear Bob:

I was glad to receive your letter of 2 March concerning [redacted]. He had visited our personnel office on 3 March and mentioned that we would be hearing from you.

If we had any doubts about [redacted] (b)(6) qualifications, your warm recommendation would certainly dispel them. Our problem lies, however, in locating a position in his general field of experience which would entail sufficient responsibility and challenge to interest a man of his talents and abilities. Our recruitment takes place at junior levels and our more responsible positions are generally filled by the promotion or reassignment of careerists in our service. Infrequently, there is an opening of senior level which is filled through external recruitment but such openings ordinarily require specialized qualifications in our particular fields of work. Accordingly, our representative was not encouraging to [redacted] but left him with the understanding that his file would be brought to the attention of interested officials to be sure that all possibilities were explored.

Thank you for taking the time to write to me about [redacted]. It was a pleasure to hear from you.

Sincerely,
